In Kindergarten, children establish foundational skills that will follow them throughout their academic careers and into adulthood. Writing is a critical form of expressive output required in our schools today. Handwriting needs to be an easy and automatic skill for our children so that they can focus on the words they choose to use to express themselves. Awkward letter formation, poor pencil grip, and difficult letter recall impact a child's ability to feel successful in school.

We offer small group instruction to help children build fine motor skills, increase Kindergarten readiness and promote mastery of letter formation. We draw, we sing, we write, and most importantly, we have fun!

Some children need a little extra attention and small group instruction to help them learn and master certain concepts. We use multisensory and fun activities to help reinforce concepts learned in school. We explicitly teach children skills so that they want to draw, color and write.
